STATE OF THE NWTF

In fiscal year 2025, the National Wild Turkey Federation experienced remarkable growth and progress. We expanded wild turkey research into new areas, restored habitats across the country, and reached more people than ever through our Education and Outreach programs. Our Convention and Sport Show continued to break records, welcoming more than 82,000 passionate outdoorsmen and women. These achievements reflect the hard work and dedication of our volunteers, members and conservation partners. Because of your commitment, the NWTF can continue to elevate our impact, strengthen our mission, and build a brighter future for conservation. Our 2025 Annual Report highlights some of these accomplishments.

Starting in late 2023, we outlined a 10-year internal strategy to build upon the NWTF's 50-year legacy and carry our organization far into the future. We are aiming to grow our organizational endowment, cultivate a thriving network of active NWTF chapters, and more than double our membership. In addition, we will launch more NWTF-owned conservation initiatives nationwide and expanding wild turkey research projects and much more. In just two years, we have made significant progress toward these goals.

The NWTF endowment currently stands at $19.8 million. While that's incredible progress, we have a long way to go to ensure the financial health of the organization long into the future. By creating new regional staff positions to assist NWTF volunteers working at the grassroots level, we've seen local NWTF chapters eclipse 1,300, and there are about 260,000 NWTF members across the country. As the people are the NWTF's lifeblood, more dedicated members and volunteers equate to more on-the-ground mission delivery.

While we are steamrolling ahead with our 10-year strategy, our mission delivery has become more effective than it has ever been in our more than 50-year history.

During our annual Conservation Week in September, we showcased the breadth of the NWTF mission across the country, from the riparian habitat restoration work in the Great Plains to the accelerated efforts to put wild turkey nesting and brood-rearing habitat on the ground in the Southeast. We also announced our new Midwestern Roots to Roost Initiative during this celebratory annual event. The initiative will restore and enhance critical wildlife habitat on public and private land by uniting conservation stewards across America's heartland, making a landscape-scale impact that will conserve the wild turkey and our natural resources for future generations.

Already garnering excitement from NWTF volunteers and partners within the region, Roots to Roost dovetails into the NWTF's other regionally based conservation efforts, including the Forests and Flocks Initiative, the Habitat for the Hatch Initiative and the Waterways for Wildlife Initiative. NWTF's conservation staff are also building an NWTF-owned initiative for the West that will be formally launched in 2026.

If our conservation delivery is the vehicle to more robust wild turkey populations and healthier ecosystems, research is our compass. Research provides valuable insights for our dedicated biologists and our state and federal agency partners, ensuring we are impacting the right acres at the right time. Thanks to the Bass Pro Shops and Cabela's Outdoor Fund, NWTF state chapters and our many agency and academic partners, 2025 was another monumental year for wild turkey research.

We directed more than $500,000 to nine wild turkey projects, bringing our investment in wild turkey research to more than $2.3 million since 2022. These investments, when leveraged with partner matching funds, have resulted in more than $22 million to wild turkey research projects since 2022.

Fiscal year 2025 also saw innovation in wild turkey research and partnerships. WildturkeyDNA is a new, large-scale, collaborative research endeavor working to better understand the bird's genetic makeup through hunter-harvested wild turkey DNA samples. With more than 100 DNA samples in Year 1, the program is poised for growth. Understanding population genetics across each subspecies' range offers an invaluable opportunity to conduct science that informs wildlife managers, state and federal agencies and hunters passionate about this remarkable bird.

With the newly created national director of wild turkey research position recently announced and the planned growth of the NWTF endowed professorship program to include two new universities leading into 2026, we are further cementing our commitment to the conservation of wild turkeys.

Our conservation and research efforts are as sharp and powerful as ever, and so are our efforts to ensure the future of our outdoor pursuits.

Through the evolution of our Education and Outreach programs and expansion of the chapter system to university campuses, the NWTF is working to reach all who are interested in the outdoors, both through our legacy programs — like JAKES, Women in the Outdoors and Wheelin' Sportsmen — and new opportunities. The NWTF believes that our natural resources are for the enjoyment of everyone and is firmly committed to uniting a nation through the life-changing power of the outdoors.

Long-term success, innovative conservation initiatives, record-setting research investments and so much more — this past year stands as a monumental piece of the NWTF's storied timeline. Set in motion in the early '70s, our mission — the conservation of the wild turkey and the preservation of our hunting heritage — has allowed us to accomplish so much for the wild turkey and our nation's other natural treasures. NWTF volunteers, partners, members and staff — together, we will ensure our efforts, and the gobble of the wild turkey, echo for generations to come.

Entering the Build Phase

After two years of the NWTF's 10-year strategic plan, investments are beginning to see returns.

Entering year three of the NWTF's 10-year strategic plan, fruit is beginning to produce. After identifying key areas of need and focused funding in specific areas, it's become time to build on a foundation set.

Investments in IT infrastructure and staffing improvements continued in FY25 and have been fully implemented, creating a more functional and streamlined organization. As planned, the headquarters campus of the NWTF was sold in the fall, freeing up more funding for on-the-ground and mission-related work. A more size-appropriate office is planned at the NWTF Palmetto Shooting Complex's 600-acre property in Edgefield.

Red budgetary figures have turned black as the organization's strategy takes effect, with field staff increasing nationally producing more fundraising events and boosting membership. Our landscape-scale conservation initiatives have grown once more, covering a large swath of the Midwest with the Roots to Roost Initiative, and we saw more research project proposals this year than ever before. The NWTF continues to focus on conservation and hunting advocacy to increase the general public's awareness and multiply the outdoor community's voice nationwide. In addition, new hires geared toward working in and around college campuses are focusing on the next generation.

Ultimately, the NWTF is building toward an optimized, sustainable organization capable of carrying our mission and vision far into the future.

Research Boom

The NWTF eclipsed $50 million invested in research since its first project in 1977.

Solidifying its role as the national leader in wild turkey conservation, the National Wild Turkey Federation directed significant funding to cutting-edge wild turkey research for 2025, building on a powerful investment strategy helping guide the sustainability of the wild turkey. This year's funding has brought the NWTF's investment in wild turkey ecology research — in just over three years — to $2,101,439 through its National Wild Turkey Request for Proposals Program. Combined with this year's $503,618 investment and previous partner engagement, the NWTF and its partners have provided more than $22 million to wild turkey research projects since 2022.

Thirty-plus wild turkey research projects across the country have been funded by the NWTF in three years.

The Bass Pro Shops and Cabela's Outdoor Fund continued its investment in the NWTF's 2025 research efforts by contributing significant funding to the NWTF's RFP Program. In addition, NWTF state chapters and multiple NWTF regional conservation initiatives provided funding for the organization's 2025 investment in wild turkey research.

"The NWTF Technical Committee provides a mechanism for state turkey biologists to provide NWTF with a list of national research priorities and review and provide input on the ranking process to ensure proposed projects

For 2025, the NWTF received more research proposals in a given year than ever before. Proposals were rigorously scored by NWTF biologists and the NWTF Wild Turkey Technical Committee. This network of wild turkey experts scores and ranks projects on their scientific rigor, partner engagement, secured matching funds and the applicability toward the NWTF'S key areas of emphasis.

National Wild Turkey Technical Committee co-chair. "Together, with NWTF and research partners at universities, we are increasing our collective understanding of turkey ecology in North America."

Projects awarded funding this year will occur over a multiyear duration. The NWTF's 2025 investment is providing vital funding that are most important to management decisions are prioritized," said Kent Fricke, Nebraska Game and Parks Commission assistant division administrator and NWTF for the nine projects each year when the necessary work takes place. Since 2022, the NWTF has provided significant funding to dozens of wild turkey research projects.

Projects for 2025 funding include:

- Florida: Habitat Quality and Poult Productivity
- Georgia, South Carolina: Management Strategies and Season Structure Influence on Gobbling
- Kentucky: Reproductive Ecology of Wild Turkeys in Kentucky
- Oklahoma: Hunting Pressure and Harvest Management
- Minnesota: Assessment of Wild Turkeys in Urban-Agro Interface
- New Hampshire: Survival, Harvest Rates and Disease
- Rhode Island: Disease Prevalence on Eastern Wild Turkey Reproductive Success
- Texas: Habitat and Phenology-Period Survival of Female Rio Grande Turkeys
- Texas: Wild Turkey Population Dynamics via Genetic Mark-Recapture and Modeling

WildturkeyDNA Begins

A collaborative research initiative exploring wild turkey genetics is beginning to find a better understanding of the birds' genetic makeup — and uncovering more questions along the way.

WildturkeyDNA — which is spearheaded by the Wild Turkey Lab, the National Wild Turkey Federation, Ducks Unlimited, the University of Texas El Paso and the Low Country Game Bird Foundation — is in its first year of sample collecting, testing and analysis. The project seeks assistance from hunters to study wild turkey genetics on a broad scale, hoping to gain a better understanding of population genetics across the species' range, and uncover scientific data that can inform hunters, wildlife managers, and state and federal agencies.

Initially, the collaborative project is seeking to improve the overall understanding of the origins of color variations in turkey feathers and the potential for color phases in wild turkey populations. As part of the study, hunters send turkey tissue samples — a portion of the tongue — via a kit for genetic analysis to the Lavretsky Lab at UTEP. When ancestry testing has been completed, results are provided to the hunter and published. In 2025, wildturkeyDNA received more than 100 sample collection kits from hunters.

“Many of the birds with odd plumage are not entirely wild turkeys,” said Michael Chamberlain, NWTF distinguished professor and founder of the Wild Turkey Lab. “Yes, they’re turkeys living in the wild, but they’re not exactly wild turkeys. Quite a bit of the odd plumage that we’re seeing is going to be traced in some way to the presence of non-wild genetics.”

First-year analysis has also revealed the incredible depth and convoluted nature of wild turkey genetics across the bird's broad range.

“Several factors are going on in turkey populations that create a lot of genetic complexity,” Chamberlain said. “For example, subspecies that are different genetically to some degree. You have a lot of genetic structure going on. Turkeys in Alabama are different genetically than turkeys in New York, but they're the same subspecies. From one spot on the planet to another spot, there are already genetic differences we can pick up."

In the future, wildturkeyDNA will expand its testing to evaluate additional concerns, such as genetic diversity, hybridization and detailed metrics of population genetics across the wild turkey's range. Chamberlain said the group will hold a seminar at the 2026 NWTF Convention, at which hunters can sign up to be considered for participation. Ideally, the effort will ultimately capture samples from birds in all 49 states with wild turkey populations.

"Be patient," Chamberlain said. "We're learning a lot here. Every little fold we flip over, we discover something else of interest. There's a lot to unpack."

Professorships Growth

In 2025, the NWTF received more wild turkey research proposals from universities and partners than ever before in a given year. This record-breaking year illustrates our partners' continued interest and commitment to the conservation of the bird we love. The NWTF endowment at the University of Georgia has grown substantially. In just over a year, the NWTF National Board of Directors, NWTF state chapters and supporters contributed nearly $1 million to this endowment. The NWTF Distinguished Professorship at the University of Georgia will help fund wild turkey research and cultivate a pipeline of wild turkey managers and researchers far into the future.

As the endowment grows, so too will the resources it provides to the position's chair (currently Dr. Mike Chamberlain). Not only does this funding ensure wild turkey research continues into perpetuity, but it brings the NWTF — and our mission — to countless college students. This is how we create the next wave of wild turkey biologists, managers, researchers and NWTF volunteers. In addition, we are taking this model created at UGA and applying it far and wide, with two new universities slated to announce professorships in FY26.

Initiatives

Evolving Approach to Conservation

The NWTF embarked on a conservation evolution in 2020, seeking to move to a more defined and prioritized approach to conservation work that sought the highest value acreage for every region of the country. This wasn't just a shaded area on a map – this was a plan to identify and accomplish habitat conservation, and much more, specific to the needs of each region of the country. Born from that concept are the NWTF landscape-scale initiatives. These laser-focused campaigns have identified what each region of the country needs to benefit wild turkeys and our outdoor lifestyle, plus so much more indirect benefits to our ecosystems and beyond. While still a work in progress, these landscape-scale initiatives continue to expand across the country and will strengthen the NWTF mission over the next decade and beyond. From Save the Habitat. Save the Hunt. to the NWTF's Big Six of Wildlife Conservation, our next step in the expansion and enhancement of conservation and our hunting heritage are these regionally tailored initiatives that will blanket the entire country in the near future.

Introducing the Roots to Roost Initiative

In the fall of 2025, NWTF conservation leadership announced the organization's newest initiative, the Midwestern

Roots to Roost Initiative. This bold, cross-boundary conservation effort will restore and enhance critical wildlife habitat on public and private land across Midwestern states, including Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Kentucky, Michigan, Minnesota, Missouri, Ohio and Wisconsin.

The new initiative was created out of urgency to reverse the wide-spread loss and degradation of critically important, disturbance-dependent ecosystems, such as prairie grasslands, savannas, barrens and open woodlands. These habitats are essential to wild turkeys, deer, pollinators, amphibians, songbirds and various rare and federally threatened plants and animals.

“Our partnerships with state and federal agencies are vital to delivering the NWTF’s mission on a landscape scale,” said Jared

McJunkin, NWTF director of conservation operations for the central United States. “It was an honor to formally announce our Roots to Roost Initiative here to our agency partners, and it underscores our shared commitment to restore habitat, empower landowners and ensure the Midwest’s natural resources are conserved into perpetuity.”

In a region where nearly 90% of the land is privately owned, a major component of the Roots to Roost Initiative is providing targeted programs for landowners, such as trainings, technical assistance and innovative tools like online learning modules for educating not only landowners, but resource professionals and habitat managers.

Roots to Roost will also tackle conservation challenges related to water quality and forest health and will elevate regional ecological resilience by strengthening education and outreach efforts, investments in research, participation in political advocacy and supporting active habitat management through strengthened conservation partnerships.

The initiative aims to build on the NWTF's success in the Midwest by increasing its annual impact by at least 5% — adding 250,000 acres of conservation work over the next decade. In total (2025-2035), Roots to Roost will impact 1.2 million acres of public and private lands through direct management of grasslands, forests and savannas guided by the latest scientific research.

Initiative Priorities

- Addressing the loss and degradation of ecosystems by educating landowners and professionals on the importance of managing grasslands, savannas and forests for wild turkeys and other wildlife.
- Supporting restoration and active management practices such as prescribed burning and forest thinning to maintain healthy ecosystems.
- Securing funding for innovative research and professorships that explore the impacts of management on wild turkey productivity.

- Engaging stakeholders through outreach and education to foster a greater understanding of habitat management's role in conservation.

Ensuring the Future of Our Forests and Flocks

The Northeast region boasts a rich history of wild turkey conservation. Turkeys were absent from most of the region in the early 1900s before rebounding steadily over a century. In recent decades, the region's turkey population has experienced instability or decline. The NWTF created its 10-year Forests and Flocks Initiative to prevent future declines by building upon historic restoration efforts and ensuring the health and vigor of the Northeast's wild turkey population for the future.

In addition, the Forests and Flocks Initiative is working to strengthen the region's rich hunting heritage and increase our collective voice against recurring proposed legislation that is in opposition to the NWTF's mission, while supporting policies that benefit our hunting heritage and active habitat management.

Launched in August of 2024, the Forests and Flocks Initiative is making progress toward its 10-year goal of improving 100,000 acres across Northeastern states, and in just one year, the region is celebrating results.

“We’re focusing on habitat needs for wild turkeys on a four-season scale because wild turkeys have distinct and critical requirements throughout the year,” said Kaylee Szymanski, NWTF district biologist for New England. “By managing habitats across all four seasons, the Forests and Flocks Initiative supports every stage of the wild turkey’s life cycle, increasing survival rates and reproductive success. This comprehensive approach not only strengthens wild turkey populations but also promotes healthier forests and benefits a wide range of other wildlife species.”

Education and Outreach and R3

Outreach efforts are other key components of the Forests and Flocks Initiative as there is regionally less participation in hunting and shooting sports compared to other parts of the country. Hunting does not exist without cultural support, and in the Northeast, shifting public attitudes are working against the hunting community. By hosting more inclusive and educational events, The NWTF's team in the Northeast hopes to build a strong community of support and continue to unite the nation through the life-changing power of the outdoors, whether that be through hunting, shooting, fishing or any other activity that gets folks outside. This past year, the region has stepped up to the plate by hosting many education outreach events geared toward children, women and adult-onset hunters. These events demonstrate their importance through the stories about mentorship making people feel more comfortable and equipped.

The region is also utilizing the Hunt for Good Campaign to reach a whole new demographic by highlighting the various benefits of hunting.

Policy

Forests and Flocks Initiative staff work closely with volunteers, partners and policymakers to identify and work through issues that impact wildlife management, land conservation and hunting rights. Currently, the NWTF is monitoring more than 15 proposed bills in the region that could affect land access, habitat management, wildlife management or hunting heritage. This past year, the region celebrated the passing of Connecticut and Pennsylvania's Sunday hunting bills. The Pennsylvania NWTF State Chapter also supported HB1507, which would allow non-resident college students to purchase hunting licenses at the resident fee for up to four years while enrolled within Pennsylvania if the bill passes.

Numbers to Date (2024-2034)

Between the NWTF state chapter Super Fund projects, grant work, NWTF's National Forestry Initiative (private land efforts), seed orders and equipment acres, the Forests and Flocks Initiative has already impacted 10,718.5 acres. These acres include:

- National Forestry Initiative: 1,298 acres
- Seed Program Acres: 6,880.25 acres
- Equipment Acres: 1,361.5 acres
- Super Fund, Grants and Agreements: 1,108.75 acres
- Improving Public Hunting Access: 19,800 acres

Habitat Tailored to Improve the Hatch

Across the Southeast, wild turkey poult production and hunter harvest — metrics used to gauge population stability — have indicated a declining population in many areas. From land-use changes to fragmented habitats and dynamic predator communities, multiple factors likely contribute to the decline to some degree. As research continues to provide more insight into these new challenges, one thing is sure: expanding the nesting and brood-rearing habitat that wild turkey hens need to recruit more poults into adulthood will help combat the decline. Enter the NWTF's Habitat for the Hatch Initiative.

The NWTF launched the initiative in August 2023 to positively impact 1 million acres of critical nesting and brood-rearing habitat across public and private lands by 2033.

Habitat loss has accelerated across much of the Southeast, driven by land-use changes, development and the decline of active forest management.

“Hens and poults already have a difficult time during the nesting and brood-rearing phase,” said Derek Alkire, NWTF district biologist. “Lack of active forest management and disappearing habitat only makes it harder for the species. Habitat for the Hatch is designed to put more of the critical nesting and brood-rearing habitat on the ground so more poults can make it to adulthood.”

That’s why the initiative focuses directly on improving or creating habitat that meets the unique needs of nesting hens and their young.

In the initiative’s second year alone (September 2024 – August 2025), the NWTF and partners improved 76,057 acres of nesting and brood-rearing habitat across private and public lands. These acres came from more than 150 individual Southeastern projects that fulfill the essential requirements of hens and poults, including establishing native grasses and forbs that attract protein-rich insects needed by poults and provide concealment from predators.

An additional 224,071 acres were enhanced through NWTF chapter support for prescribed burn teams, a critical tool in managing forest structure and plant diversity. Additionally, NWTF chapter support of habitat equipment in southeastern states resulted in 115,611 acres of quality nesting and brood-rearing habitat. However, only acres directly managed or improved by NWTF efforts are counted toward the 1-million-acre Habitat for the Hatch goal.

The NWTF's National Forestry Initiative with USDA-NRCS is providing a significant amount of assistance to private landowners through foresters that operate in specific areas. Those foresters working in the Habitat for the Hatch Initiative area coordinated with private landowners to positively impact over 30,500 acres of private land of habitat toward the initiative goal.

Similarly, in Florida, the Wild Turkey Cost Share Program empowers the Florida NWTF State Chapter and the Florida Wildlife Commission to fund habitat projects on public lands. Since 1994, partners have invested more than $7 million in public land turkey habitat. The year's plan included $2 million across 27 habitat projects. These projects have contributed considerably to the NWTF's Habitat for the Hatch Initiative.

Numbers to Date (2023-2033)

- Direct habitat acres improved:
150,820 acres
- Acres impacted via burn teams and equipment support: 300,000-plus acres
- Projects completed: 300-plus individual projects

Addressing Water Quality and Riparian Habitat

Water — a resource fundamental to the health of ecosystems, wildlife and people — shapes landscapes, sustains communities and is crucial to the NWTF's mission to conserve the wild turkey and preserve our hunting heritage. The Great Plains tells a story of both abundance and loss. Once spanning more than 2 million square kilometers of grassland, the ecosystem has dwindled to less than half its former reach, and today the water challenges that overlay this shrinking landscape are as complex as they are urgent. Many riparian ecosystems are in poor condition due to various causes — increased water demands, disrupted floodplains and changes in land use. Meanwhile, development continues to cover floodplains with concrete and asphalt, and rising water consumption strains already-limited supplies. These shifts not only threaten clean water and diminish habitat for wild turkeys, pollinators and countless other species — they also disrupt the balance of the entire ecosystem.

To address these challenges, the NWTF launched the Waterways for Wildlife Initiative in 2022, a collaborative effort to improve wildlife habitat while restoring watershed health across the region. Since its launch, the initiative and its partners have invested more than $27 million into conservation efforts.

The initiative's 10-year goals are ambitious: enhance 1,500 stream miles of critical waterways and improve 75,000 acres of riparian-related habitat within 10 Great Plains states. In just four years, the work is already showing measurable progress, with 211 stream miles improved and more than 50,000 acres of adjacent habitat enhanced through completed and ongoing projects.

Projects vary in scope and impact but share a common goal of clean, quality water and fully functional ecosystems. Efforts include removing invasive species, reestablishing native vegetation, restoring streambanks and reconnecting floodplains. These practices strengthen waterways, improve water quality and expand essential habitat for wild turkeys and hundreds of other species that rely on riparian areas.

The NWTF's Waterways for Wildlife Initiative continues to rally partners, build support and deliver essential water-related conservation projects across the Great Plains of America. Through this year's investment, the NWTF and its partners are set to provide over $2.7 million to 14 conservation projects across seven states within the next year, bringing the total investment among the NWTF and its partners for the Waterways for Wildlife Initiative to over $27 million since 2022.

Numbers to Date (2022-2032)

- Riparian Acres Conserved/Enhanced: 45,785*
- Stream Miles: 209.39

* Not including 10,543 associated upland acres planned or implemented in 2025

Riparian habitat work increases the diversity of vegetation found on the banks of streams, providing food and nutrients for many wildlife species.

Western Conservation in Progress

Plans to stand up an NWTF-centric initiative in the West are under way for 2026, but until then, the NWTF continues to work with conservation partners in the region to impact wildlife and reinforce the mission.

The NWTF's work with the USDA Forest Service and many other partners on wildfire mitigation drives on, improving habitats, air and water quality, and safeguarding communities.

Conservation Efforts

Nearly half of the land area in the West is federally owned or "public land." A much higher percentage of hunting in the West, about 78%, occurs on public land, according to the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service. Over the last few decades, wildfires have become larger and more severe, threatening wildlife habitat and hunting access. As a result, NWTF's conservation delivery is focused on restoring forests by lowering the fuel density and creating forests that are more resilient to wildfire and other large-scale disturbances.

The West region totaled 184,172 acres of conservation delivery, with multiple benefits. For example:

- The Upper Provo project in Utah and General Springs project in Arizona, improved turkey habitat, created resilient forests and protected municipal water and power supplies.
- Timber from projects across the West provided over 350 log truckloads of fuel wood for Southwest Tribal Nations, and supported rural economies, by supporting high paying jobs in the forest restoration economy.

Highlights from the West include the Rocky Mountain Restoration Initiative (RMRI), the Active Forest Management team, and Utah's Watershed Restoration Initiative (WRI).

RMRI was co-convened by the Forest Service and NWTF in 2019, with the intention of creating a 10-year pilot for "shared stewardship.” Implementation began on three priority landscapes in Colorado in 2020. At the mid-point of the initiative, partners have collectively treated 131,554 acres.

NWTF began implementing projects to support the Wildfire Crisis Strategy in 2023 and transitioned in 2025 to support the National Active Forest Management Strategy. In 2025, the forest management team treated 3,363 acres, completed a variety of surveys (land, botany, soil, goshawk and spotted owl, and archeology) and produced approximately 60,000 tons of timber.

Utah’s WRI pools a variety of funding sources to deliver conservation at the landscape level. Our volunteers, fundraising and conservation team worked together to impact about 117,000 acres. Across the West, the NWTF worked with the Forest Service, state wildlife agencies, USDA National Resources Conservation Service and other partners to implement wildlife habitat projects, from tree plantings to wet meadow creation and oak restoration.

Zuni Mountain Project: A Fire-Tested Success

In May 2025, a lightning strike sparked a wildfire in New Mexico’s Cibola National Forest. Thanks to proactive forest restoration in the Zuni Mountains, the fire was quickly contained, burning less than 10 acres. This outcome wasn’t luck. It was the result of years of thoughtful work to restore the forest to a more natural state. By thinning dense stands, removing excess woody material and using prescribed fire, the Zuni Mountain project has created jobs, provided fuel wood and timber products, and helped bring the forest closer to its historic structure: fewer trees, more space between them, and a mix of single trees and small clumps.

This project doesn’t just improve forest health — it also reduces the risk of severe wildfire. In this case, past treatments helped moderate fire behavior, making it safer for firefighters to protect nearby communities. The Zuni Mountain project is a clear example of how restoration pays off, not just in theory, but on the ground, where it matters most.

Education and Outreach

Renewed Focus on Retention

NWTF state and local chapters hosted over 1,000 events this year across the country.

These events are each as unique as the volunteers who hold them. These include mentored hunts, hunter education classes, learn-to-hunt clinics, wild game cooking sessions and several other events to attract lapsed hunters, as well as new-to-hunting adults and youth to the outdoors.

Nationally we challenged volunteers to hold retention events. Retention events are “next step” events, helping people stay engaged along the path of becoming a hunter. These events are held in partnership with state or federal agencies or other non-profit organizations.

Education and Outreach Programming Highlights

In the Education and Outreach department, there are many types of programs that go on as a part of our 1,000+ events every year. Below we provide a highlight of the different ways our volunteers are preserving our hunting heritage, investing in future generations of hunters, and creating conservation stewards through events across the nation. Every year our chapters and volunteers find unique ways to serve their local communities by providing programming that fits the needs of the environment. The new, innovative programming ensures we meet the ever-evolving needs of new individuals in the hunting community, as well as reignite the passion of those already within.

Conservation Field Days Annual Tree Planting Day – McCammon, Idaho

Each year, NWTF Idaho State Chapter president Joe Foster brings together the High Desert Master Naturalists, chapter volunteers and Idaho Fish and Game for a large-scale tree planting effort. This single-day event contributes roughly $30,000 in trees and shrubs to future habitat restoration projects on southeastern Idaho's public lands. Importantly, it also builds bridges with non-traditional audiences like the Master Naturalists, many of whom are not hunters, broadening conservation support.

Michigan Earth Craft

Skill Share

NWTF R3 hunting and shooting coordinator Jen Davis joined the 2nd annual Tiller's International Earth Craft Skill Share event to lead three hunting heritage classes: Hunting as a Sacred Practice, Archery Through the Ages, and Hunter's Amulet. Each course was important for reaching audiences outside of the traditional hook-and-bullet crowd. Davis said she found these courses allowed attendees to have open conversations about hunting culture free of judgement, allowing them to understand and become involved in that atmosphere.

The South Carolina NWTF organized a memorable hunting heritage catfish trip for four veterans, who were treated to an unforgettable overnight fishing expedition. Accompanied by Aaron Parks, a supporting South Carolina NWTF board member, the veterans embarked on a journey filled with camaraderie, adventure and relaxation. Parks played a crucial role in ensuring the trip's success by assisting with cooking, reeling in fish and serving as a knowledgeable first mate on the boat.

Chapter JAKES Day -

The Brandon Boss Gobblers held their 16th annual JAKES Day in 2025, providing 20 local youth with an immersive introduction to the outdoors. Youth participants rotated through hands-on stations including archery, rifle and pistol shooting and clay target shooting.

For many youth, it was their first time trying these activities, and several became new JAKES members during the event. More than just a day of fun, JAKES Days strengthen community connections, bring families together outdoors and lay the foundation for future hunters and conservationists.

Turkey Hunting Class

Hosted in partnership with the New Hampshire Department of Fish and Game, this turkey hunting class was an opportunity for new turkey hunters of any age to learn about all things turkey. Seacoast Strutters Chapter volunteers shared tips for hunting safety, scouting, equipment, biology, field dressing and calling. Attendees went home with a free box, slate or mouth call and an informational packet containing content discussed during the day. NWTF volunteers also offered to mentor new hunters. This event gave new hunters refreshed confidence to get out into woods for the upcoming spring gobbler season.

NWTF Museum Update

One of the most longstanding partners of the organization, and specifically Education and Outreach, is Bass Pro Shops and Cabela's. The support and contributions to hunting heritage through our partnership with Bass Pro Shops started decades ago through the NWTF JAKES (Juniors Acquiring Knowledge, Ethics and Sportsmanship) program. At the 19th annual NWTF Convention in Nashville, Tennessee, honorary convention chairman, John L. Morris stood beside his close personal friend, Porter Wagoner, and pledged $100,000 to support JAKES. The offer was met with a standing ovation by NWTF volunteers and staff.

Bass Pro has continued to support our hunting heritage efforts through the years, and we are partnering again to house our NWTF museum collections within the Wonders of Wildlife Museum and Aquarium in Springfield, Missouri. With over 8 million visitors, Wonders of Wildlife takes you on a journey through immersive habitats that entertain and educate while sharing the story of America's most significant conservationists throughout history and today.

Additionally, with the transition of our NWTF Museum collections, some of our local historical collections will be loaned to Edgefield County at The Edgefield Welcome Center. Plans are underway to establish an NWTF exhibit including an NWTF timeline focusing on the role Edgefield and its citizens played in getting the organization started, the Neil Cost turkey call collection, turkey folk art and much more.

The fourth phase of the Hunt for Good campaign concluded at the end of 2024, and early 2025 brought the analysis and reports from this Northeast Regional Campaign. In partnership with the Northeast Association of Fish and Wildlife Agencies, as well as the Council for Advanced Hunting and Shooting Sports, this project spread positive messaging around hunting with the general non-hunting public. The campaign strives to effectively reach non-hunters across the country with informative material communicating the benefits of hunting to help build support and knowledge around hunting and the outdoor lifestyle.

As the report wrapped up, results from the six-week campaign reflected impressions, or the number of times the campaign was seen, which exceeded 20.2 million. Impressions were served in seven states throughout the region and D.C.

Ads in the campaign that mentioned the 'Hunt for the Bond' and 'Hunt for the Harvest' benefits drove the highest total traffic, displaying some of the unique messages that resonated with the Northeastern general population. These findings are essential as we see other state agencies and partners across the country begin to create their own campaigns with Hunt for Good.

For example, the Missouri Department of Conservation has successfully used campaigns in its personal marketing endeavors with more than 11.4 million impressions over the course of two six-week campaigns.

R3 Coordinator Snapshot

NWTF co-funded R3 coordinator Kirsty Paulsen works to coordinate the Outdoor Skills Network and has attended turkey camps all over Arizona. NWTF volunteers helped run the camps along with the Arizona Game and Fish Department. Paulsen said some of the youth who have previously gone through the Outdoor Skills Network are now back as volunteers.

Collegiate Connection

The NWTF is investing in our future by creating collegiate ambassador positions across the country to establish chapters on college campuses. Research has shown that involvement at the college ranks leads to tomorrow's local volunteers and conservation leaders.

- An internal case study conducted by one of the NWTF's strategic planning teams regarding membership found that collegiate chapters create more members, more net dollars, more local NWTF chapters, volunteer leaders and staff.
- Investments in NWTF chapters at colleges and universities create a structure that is encouraging for the growth of our brand with a younger demographic to create the future pipeline of NWTF leaders, volunteers and staff.
- In the cases of N.C. State University and the University of Alabama chapters, net dollars raised grew nearly 100% from the first year to the second.
- More than 10 local chapters were started or led by previous collegiate volunteers when looking at colleges and universities with five-plus years of post-college grads.

The NWTF has hired collegiate ambassadors for the Habitat for the Hatch Initiative in the Southeast (Chance Wiggins) and for the Forests and Flocks Initiative in the Northeast (Jackson Mabon). Wiggins joined the NWTF team in late 2024, while Mabon began working in mid-2025. The investment in two collegiate ambassador positions is already making an impact in these regions. Post COVID-19, as few as eight collegiate chapters remained across the country. Now collegiate chapters number 17 and are growing at a rapid pace.

“Beyond just adding new chapters, we hope to educate future generations on the importance of protecting our hunting heritage and conservation,” said Barry Woods, NWTF national director of event fundraising. “By allowing students to play a role in the success of the initiative in their own backyard, we’re fostering a deep, personal connection to conservation. The end goal is to build a strong base of young members who will one day take the NWTF to new heights.”

From College Chapter to NWTF Staffer

“I started out in my position truly from the basis of my understanding through my participation in the college chapter at N.C. State,” said Morgan Evans, NWTF national R3 and relevancy coordinator. “In college, I got to work with volunteers, education and outreach events, as well as the conservation efforts, so when I was making my choice for a career and wanting to figure out how I could get involved in the conservation scene, I knew first and foremost what the NWTF was all about and the value it would bring to be a part of an organization like this.”

“I decided to join the SUNY Cobleskill Chapter of the NWTF because I loved what the mission stood for,” said Austin Zweck, NWTF regional director. “I truly believe that if it wasn’t for the SUNY Cobleskill Chapter of the NWTF, and what I learned there while being at college, that I would not be in the position that I am at today of having the amazing career that I have of working for the NWTF.”

NWTF Policy Work: Advocating for the Resource

NWTF staff and volunteers went to work in FY25 to monitor conservation and hunting-related legislation and act when necessary. This is a time-consuming and tedious process, one we take seriously due to the impact it can have on us all. Our staff, partners and volunteers continue to fight the good fight for the resource, NWTF's membership and outdoorsmen and women across the country. More than 100 state and federal bills were monitored or engaged by NWTF representatives in FY25.

Federal Policy Recap

Fiscal year 2025 was a pivotal year for federal policy affecting wildlife conservation, habitat management and outdoor recreation. With unified Republican control across the White House, Congress and the Supreme Court, NWTF seized opportunities to advance legislation aligned with our mission while navigating budget challenges and threats to public lands.

Congressional Highlights

The 118th Congress delivered mixed results. A major win came with the House passage of the EXPLORE Act (America's Outdoor Recreation Act in the Senate), streamlining permitting for guides and recreational users, enhancing accessibility, and protecting shooting ranges on public lands. We also successfully opposed the Benjamin Harrison National Recreation Area and Wilderness Establishment Act, which would have restricted access to 44,000 acres in Indiana.

However, the 2018 Farm Bill renewal stalled again, leaving key conservation programs like EQIP and CRP in limbo. The Recovering America's Wildlife Act also failed to gain traction.

2025 Legislative Landscape

In the new Congress, we prioritized bipartisan efforts like the Fix Our Forests Act to accelerate forest management and address wildfire risks. We advocated for Farm Bill renewal, longer-term stewardship contracts, and sustained funding for The USDA National Resources Conservation Service and USDA Forest Service programs.

President Trump's second-term agenda introduced the Department of Government Efficiency (DOGE), resulting in around 30% staffing cuts at USDA agencies. NWTF responded by strengthening support for our partners.

The centerpiece was the "One Big Beautiful Bill Act" (OBBBA), which restructured Farm Bill program funding by rescinding Inflation Reduction Act dollars and redirecting $16 billion to private lands conservation. We helped defeat a controversial provision to sell off Western public lands, mobilizing thousands of NWF members through letter-writing campaigns.

Fall Budget Battles

Congress returned in September to intense budget negotiations. A short-term continuing resolution was passed in the House to extend funding through Nov. 21, but partisan disputes in the Senate led to a government shutdown. Senate Leader John Thune used the "Nuclear Option" to confirm 48 presidential appointments with a simple majority, several at USDA and Department of the Interior.

Conservation Reserve Program authorization expired on Sept. 30, halting new NRCS contracts. We continue pushing for a "skinny" Farm Bill to reauthorize unfunded programs and remove restrictive language on the types of trees included in conservation contract renewals, which could impact Southeastern habitats, though another extension is likely this year.

NWTF members and chapters supported the passage of legislation that reduced liability for private landowners engaged in prescribed fire practices.

Looking Ahead

The NWTF had several key policy wins in 2025 and laid strong groundwork for 2026. We'll keep leveraging partnerships and member advocacy to protect public access, enhance habitat and preserve our hunting heritage.

State Policy Action

East Region

East staff monitored or engaged in 23 bills, regulation change proposals and draft land management plans. Of the policy issues that reached a conclusion, seven of the items were resolved favorably and four were unfavorable. There were a few big wins during the year. Most notably there were great strides made for our hunting heritage with the passing of laws in Connecticut and Pennsylvania that allows for greater Sunday hunting opportunities.

NWTF state chapters were engaged in both as these were items that fell directly in line with priorities identified in our Forests and Flocks Initiative. Additionally, the legislature in Mississippi authorized a wild turkey stamp requirement for hunters that will bolster the state wildlife agency's ability to fund wild turkey habitat management, education and research throughout the Magnolia State.

Staff in the East tackled other policy issues including:

- Bills related to semi-automatic firearm bans in multiple states.
- Wild turkey hunting regulation change proposals.

- Longterm public land management plans.
- Restrictions on conservation organization fundraising using small games of chance.
- Hunter education.

Overall, there were some significant policy wins in the East that our volunteers and members played a significant role in.

Central Region

In 2025, staff in the Central Region actively monitored a wide range of policy initiatives related to wild turkey conservation and habitat management across 14 states. The NWTF engaged directly with 10 legislative bills, achieving notable success with two supported bills passing and six opposed bill failing, while outcomes for 11 bills remain pending. These achievements reflect the Central Region's continued commitment to advancing conservation policy and supporting our partners in protecting and enhancing wild turkeys and their habitat.

Key policy themes included:

- Establishing stable and sustainable funding mechanisms for conservation.
- Safeguarding the use of essential habitat management tools, such as prescribed fire.

Summary of FY25 Activities

NWTF State Chapters chose to actively engage in some policy issues, monitor others, actively try to influence legislative action behind the scenes, or remain neutral as a chapter and encourage members to engage on their own. Of the 82 bills or regulations that NWTF chose to engage in, there was a favorable disposition approximately 55% of the time. Bills had an unfavorable disposition 21% of the time. Approximately 24% of the bills in which we engaged in the 2024-25 legislative session are still active.

Final Disposition

Number of Bills by Topic

- Reducing restrictions on online fundraising for conservation organizations.
- Revising license fee structures to better support wildlife agencies.
- Promoting the creation of specialty license plates to generate additional conservation funding.

Consistent with previous years, NWTF provided dedicated support to state wildlife agency partners, particularly when the integrity of wildlife commission structures was at risk. This included opposing proposals for unnecessary oversight, restructuring, or even one proposal to completely abolish a state wildlife agency. NWTF also actively defended existing conservation funding sources, notably in states like Missouri, where stable funding mechanisms often face these challenges.

Our most significant policy victories in the Central Region this year were those in Indiana. The Indiana State Chapter, in collaboration with a broad coalition of conservation organizations, successfully:

- After a multi-year advocacy effort, prevented the designation of a new wilderness area within the Hoosier National Forest, which would have prohibited hunting and most conservation practices.
- Secured legislative changes that eased restrictions on online fundraising.
- Supported the passage of legislation that reduced liability for private landowners engaged in prescribed fire practices.

West Region

In 2025, West region staff tracked or engaged in 48 bills across 11 states.

Firearms legislation remained active in several western legislatures. In many of those cases, we chose to monitor rather than engage directly, recognizing that legal challenges — not legislative debates — would likely determine the outcomes.

Coalitions focused on wildlife conservation and sportsmen's issues

The NWTF continues to monitor and engage on bills related to semi-automatic firearms in multiple states.

continued to grow in strength and influence. We supported proactive efforts led by these groups, including bills on wildlife management and reforming state wildlife commissions. In Washington, for example, three commission reform bills failed to advance, but the incoming governor appointed commissioners supported by the hunting and conservation community — a win for balanced, science-based management.

Meanwhile, Utah asked the U.S. Supreme Court to weigh in on federal land ownership within state borders. Bills that supported Utah's request surfaced in Arizona, Montana and Oregon, but all failed in committee. The Supreme Court rejected Utah's request, leading to a federal public lands battle through the budget bill.

Across the board, our efforts supported the North American Model of Wildlife Conservation, ensuring that wildlife decisions remain rooted in science, public trust and long-term stewardship.

The NWTF's financial audit was not complete by the time this report was printed. Figures are preliminary.

In FY 2025, the National Wild Turkey Federation made transformative investments to strengthen our capacity and deepen our impact across the nation.

Recognizing that sustainable growth requires robust infrastructure, we implemented new systems that will enhance operational efficiency and enable data-driven decision-making for years to come. These foundational investments enabled us to bolster member engagement and launch innovative regional initiatives that bring our mission closer to home.

NWTF Program Efficiency was over 89% in FY 2025.

We continue to build strength and resiliency within the organization, which is backed by an endowment that has grown significantly over the past four years. But most importantly, our members can take pride in knowing that 89 cents of every dollar received goes directly to activities that support our mission — a testament to our commitment to maximizing conservation impact.

Together, these strategic investments position NWTF for sustained growth and greater impact in fulfilling our vision of a nation united by the life-changing power of the outdoors.

Corporate Partnerships

Visionary Partners

The NWTF experienced another stellar year in corporate partner support.

While the majority of the $1.6 million financial support from partners comes through media and sponsorship opportunities, 2025 brought an increase in support for our research and regional conservation initiatives.

Mossy Oak completed a significant five-year commitment for wild turkey research projects in addition to their ongoing support for media and convention sponsorship. Bass Pro Shops and Cabela's continue to be a leader in corporate partnerships for the NWTF, donating to support conservation and our hunting heritage through the Bass Pro Shops and Cabela's Outdoor Fund, which has contributed millions of dollars to the NWTF mission.

New corporate partner support for the NWTF's Habitat for the Hatch Initiative included Jack's Links and Moultrie Mobile, whose commitments along with matched funding totaled more than $350,000.

"We are overjoyed to see our corporate partners embracing the need for critical funding for NWTF's regional conservation initiatives. It truly shows their commitment to improve habitat for the future of the wild turkey and hunting. We are grateful for their meaningful support and welcome others to contribute," said Natalia Daniels, NWTF's national director of corporate relations and licensing.

In 2025, more than a dozen new companies joined the ranks of NWTF's corporate partners who continue to support membership recruitment programs, Education and Outreach efforts, Hunting Heritage Banquets, collegiate chapter events, the National Convention and Sport Show and more. These partners recognize the importance of the NWTF mission and help ensure our vision of uniting a nation through the life-changing power of the outdoors.

Our Corporate Conservation Circle

All corporate partners who have achieved life-to-date support of $20,000 or more through our fiscal year end are listed in our Corporate Conservation Circle. The NWTF Corporate Conservation Circle recognizes financial support through contracted marketing and corporate sponsorship programs, separate from our philanthropic Major Donor program. These partners and their contributions are a vital part of mission delivery.
